This large home was designed for Alan Tillery and his extended family. The enormous 20' high foyer adds a sense of place when you receive guests. Level 9' ceilings are used throughout the first and second floor for a spacious interior and airy feel. The game room gives the kids a place of their own, (in other words, out of everyone's hair). The 3-1/2 baths are distributed smartly throughout. The kitchen is central to everything in this house and an oversized walk-in pantry creates the maximum in utilitarian benefit. My favorite part is the master bath with his/hers vanities and closets, stand alone shower, and garden tub. The second (or maybe first) best feature of the home is the home office. Alan wanted to access from the home office to be close to the master bedroom, but the great thing about this design is that you can also access the office from the foyer, allowing business associates visiting your home office to be taken to the home office directly from the front door without going through your house.
